

Educators From Around The World Meet In Tampa For International School Symposium

For immediate release: November 5, 2006

Tampa, Fla.

Education leaders from around the world will be meeting in Tampa this week to discuss global trends in education, opportunities for worldwide networking and partnerships, and school development in a global age. The meetings are part of the International School Connection's (ISC) Global Summit, "Leading School Partnerships Across Borders," which is being sponsored by Independent Day School-Corbett Campus and the Museum of Science and Industry (MOSI).

The International School Connection is a non-profit organization based in the United States with an international board representing nine countries on three continents. The purpose of the ISC's Global Learning network is to promote and support school development activity around the world that seeks to prepare young people for living and working in the global age.

As an ISC Global Learning Center, Independent Day School-Corbett Campus will host summit participants on Nov. 7. Educators will tour the campus and observe teachers utilizing state-of-the-art teaching techniques that are based on the most current brain-based research. The school's headmaster, Dr. Joyce Burick Swarzman, will address the international group on the topic of "Sustainability & Innovation for School Leadership: M.O.R.E."

Independent Day School-Corbett Campus is the first elementary/middle school to participate in the endorsement process of the International School Connection Global Learning Center.

The summit begins on Nov. 6 at MOSI at 8:30 a.m. with an opening keynote address by David Isaacs, founder of World Café, on "The World Café Movement Around the Globe." At 10:45 a.m. the summit's World Café will take place: "Creating a Global Story of Schooling".
